When NCJW is present, change happens, social justice is delivered, and a difference is made. Being at the tables of change and delivering a powerful grassroots network of change-makers makes NCJW valued, vital, and visible. Author and artist Joan Harris-Ward expresses the profound essence of this dynamic in her words “One can do so much. And one and one and one can move mountains.” We have been a powerful force for progressive social change for more than a century — this year was no different.

Our collective action
Each of us is an advocate for social change. NCJW members take action in varied and personal ways every day — the evidence is in NCJW’s incredible capacity to create meaningful change. Our actions, whether grand or intimate, reaching across the globe or simply across the street, make a meaningful and purposeful difference.

Our newest action campaign, Higher Ground: NCJW’s Domestic Violence Campaign, demonstrates the reach of NCJW’s collective action. The campaign tackles one of the largest systemic reasons that violence against women persists — lack of financial security — and its potency is two-fold. Our advocacy and coalition work endeavors to strengthen economic policies, like equal pay protections and the provision of paid sick and safe leave for victims of domestic violence, at state and national levels, while our local work provides direct, hands-on support in neighborhoods, helping to identify and address each community’s most pressing needs. It is the combined breadth and depth of our action that makes NCJW a unique and vital force for progressive social change and is the quintessence of what we as modern Jewish women are called upon to do.

Our collective voice
A collective of like-souled women, NCJW members and advocates speak with one voice to take action and make a difference in the lives of those most vulnerable. This year, NCJW made its voice heard on critical issues such as immigration reform, marriage equality, domestic violence, economic security, and reproductive health. We achieved a substantial victory with the passage of a health care reform package in the spring, a victory that NCJW tirelessly worked toward for decades with members of Congress and our coalition partners. While we did not get everything we fought for in the bill, particularly with regard to access to reproductive health care, the new mandate for health care is an encouraging step toward affordable and accessible care for all.
Our collective strength

This year, we also delivered our collective strength to secure another historic victory for civil rights, for equality, and for democracy with the repeal of the oppressive “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy. (We are still celebrating last year’s historic passage of an expanded Hate Crimes Act to include hate crimes motivated by sexual orientation, gender or gender preference.) This repeal is a shining example of “the power that results when our collective voices cry out for justice,” and NCJW will continue to lead the progressive Jewish community to speak out on issues important to us.

There are many challenges still ahead. With the economy still stagnant and an increasingly antagonistic political environment, we face a potentially gridlocked Congress in a nation that will need to make tough choices and determine important priorities in the coming years. The assault on women’s reproductive rights is at a peak with essential funding supporting safe, accessible healthcare for women and families in peril. The challenges are great … but the opportunities are even greater. In the first months of 2011, Nancy K. Kaufman began as NCJW’s new CEO and is working with the outgoing and incoming boards to chart our course for the new triennium. As we welcome new leaders, new voices, and new energy, we ensure that our path continues forward, moving from strength to strength.

Change happens only because of each of our involvement, each of our passion, and each of our tenacity.

NCJW’s strength is built upon the unwavering commitment of you, its 90,000 members, donors and advocates. Your uncompromising pursuit of tikkun olam — repair of the world — through lasting social change sustains us. It is the collective of our voices, our actions, and our commitment that makes NCJW strong.

Together, we will ensure a better America and a safer global community in which women, children and families will prosper. Together … we will move mountains.

With gratitude and appreciation,

Nancy Ratzan
President, 2008–2011

Nancy K. Kaufman
NCJW CEO
I am deeply honored to be a part of President Obama’s Advisory Council for Faith-based and Neighborhood Partnerships. My selection is a tribute to NCJW’s record of speaking out and taking action as a faith-based organization on behalf of social justice and progressive social change.

NCJW events are always a wonderful way to connect with colleagues from all over the country. They bring new vitality and commitment to the forefront.

– 2010 Leaders Retreat Attendee

NCJW members Christine Stone, Pittsburgh Section, Linda Lempert, Philadelphia Section, and Eleanor Levie, Philadelphia Section, joined more than 400 NCJW advocates to strengthen their knowledge of the issues and challenges facing our country and our world through in-depth briefings by political leaders and policy experts at NCJW’s Washington Institute 2010. PHOTO CREDIT: RICK REINHARD 2010
The most inspiring moment was hearing how respected NCJW is from the members of Congress who joined us at breakfast. I sat there and felt “Of course we are!”

Poverty, injustice, and violence: these are the types of challenges we face as Americans and as citizens of the world. They are significant, but not insurmountable. Together, with a commitment to social justice, peace, and human rights, we can leave our children a better America and a safer global community in which to prosper.

– NCJW’s Vision for America

In March 2010, NCJW launched Higher Ground: NCJW’s Domestic Violence Campaign, which joins NCJW’s roster of domestic initiatives that focus on key public policy issues and provide the information and resources necessary to take action at all levels, from town halls to the halls of Congress. If this week we have been spelling ‘Jewish Woman’ with a capital ‘J’ and a capital ‘W,’ it is not vaingloriously nor in a spirit of boasting that we have been rummaging the pages of history for the illustrious daughters of Judah… In them we have been trying to discover ideals for ourselves, our daughters and granddaughters.

– Hannah G. Solomon, Remarks at the Jewish Women’s Congress, 1893
NCJW has always sought to help the less fortunate and at-risk populations, whomever they may be. In order for Israel to remain a Jewish yet vibrant democratic state, it needs to work for equality and dignity for all of its citizens, regardless of their race, religion, or gender.

Where, after all, do universal human rights begin? In small places, close to home … they are the world of the individual person: The neighborhood he lives in; the school or college he attends; the factory, farm or office where he works. Such are the places where every man, woman and child seeks equal justice, equal opportunity, equal dignity without discrimination. Unless these rights have meaning there, they have little meaning anywhere. Without concerted citizen action to uphold them close to home, we shall look in vain for progress in the larger world.

– Eleanor Roosevelt

NCJW sections bring valuable hands-on programs to their communities. The St. Louis Section’s Back-to-School! Store creates positive self-esteem and enthusiasm about the coming school year by giving area elementary school-aged children the opportunity to “shop” for new clothing, coats, school supplies, books and personal care items in their favorite colors.

The exceptional donors to the NCJW Center for Social Change have powerfully aligned themselves with our work by investing in building NCJW’s capacity to remain consistently at the forefront of progressive social change. Since its inception in 2009, the Center has raised more than $800,000 to support the work of NCJW.
