

Five Ways You Can Promote Economic Security and End Domestic Violence

1. Sign up to Receive NCJW Action Alerts

The NCJW Action Center serves as the primary hub for updates and action opportunities for individuals. Join the NCJW Action Center at www.ncjw.org/signup.

2. Learn About Gender-Based & Sexual Violence Issues

Visit <https://www.ncjw.org/work/gender-based-and-sexual-violence/> to learn about NCJW's approach to combatting domestic violence through improved economic security. On the website you'll also find factsheets and FAQs that will help you turn your ideals into action:

3. Speak Out in the Press

Get the word out about domestic violence and economic security by writing letters to the editor and op-eds in your local paper. Be sure to tie these messages in with events or policy decisions in your community.

4. Raise Awareness on Social Media by Sharing Stories, Statistics, and Other News

Blog and post on your social media sites to urge your social networks to join you in speaking out for economic security and against domestic violence. Use the factsheets for information to promote on Facebook and Twitter.

5. Engage Your Community in Action

Build on efforts already happening in your community to support survivors, including emergency services and advocacy efforts.

For more information or to share your Higher Ground activities, contact Lindsay Morris in the NCJW Washington Office, lindsay@ncjwdc.org or 202-375-5066.